If our young generation starts pursuing entrepreneurship as a serious career option, the day is not far away when India would again become the innovation capital of the world and the next Google and Apple would be built right here. One of the best ways to become an entrepreneur is to learn from other entrepreneurs. And an internship, especially one at a startup, gives you a first hand experience of how ideas are translated into realities. Other than teaching you about how to run a business, internships also help in polishing your technical skills and in building soft skills, which are extremely useful for any career path you may choose. Most importantly, internships make students really confident and help them discover their full potential – like a spark which ignites a fire. So, whether you are a budding student entrepreneur wanting to be mentored by entrepreneurs, or someone wanting to explore a career in the Corporate world even before completing your degree; my advice to you would be to do at least one internship while you are in college. It can change your life. If nothing else, think of it like a test drive for your career. It is heartening to see the university taking lead in organizing events like this as well as making provision for internship in the curriculum – both the initiatives would help in all round development of our students and help them achieve great heights in their lives as alumni of this august institute. Heartiest congratulations to the faculty members and the students of RGPV, Bhopal for organizing a very successful 1st edition of IMPRENDITORE. To witness so much enthusiasm among students about ‘Starting up’ was a great feeling. My best wishes!
